Miss Cathy's
 I LOVE BOOKS
 Children's Book Reviews

By Cathy A. Morrow

February is the month that honors love in a special way. This month I have chosen two books that demonstrate the love that surrounds us. Love that often goes unnoticed or is taken for granted.

JABBERWOCKY BOOKSHOP is OPEN! However, if there is a book you would like, you may order it from them and have it mailed directly to you.

YOU ARE LOVED
 A Book About Families
 Written by Margaret O'Hair
 Illustrated by Sofia Cardoso
 Scholastic Inc. Publisher
 Best for Children 4 and up

special part of your life and feel like family too.

This book demonstrates all the many different ways that we can experience love and family in our lives. Sometimes it is your biological family and other times it's a family that you create from the people in your life that care about you, even though they are not family. Sweet, colorful and detailed illustrations add to the appeal of this story.

Terry Teddy and I give this book -- --four paws up

RAVEN, RABBIT, DEER
 Written by Sue Farrell Holler
 Illustrated by Jennifer Faria
 Pajama Press, Publishers
 Best for Children 5 and up

A young grandson brings his snow boots over to his grandfather, who is sitting in his easy chair. His grandfather asks, "Want to go for a walk?" So, off they go for an adventure in the snow. They see forest animals along the way. Grandpa says the animals names as they pass by them. He says the names in English and another language. They see a rabbit and Grandpa says, "Rabbit: Waabooz." His grandson hops in the snow like a bunny. As they continue their journey, Grandpa continues to name the animals they see. They see the different shapes the different animals make in the snow with their feet. Both grandfather and grandson completely enjoy this special time together walking in the snow.

This is a very sweet story about a shared experience between a grandfather and his grandson as they walk together through the snow covered forest.

The Power of Love

By Maria Luisa Salcines

Finding the right person to love and marry is one of the greatest challenges in living. Ask any single male or female, and they will tell you how difficult it is to find that special someone.

The concept of marriage and lifelong commitment between two people is becoming a thing of the past. According to clinical psychologist Neil Warren, for every 10 marriages occurring in America today, five will end in divorce. The other five will stay married but in varying degrees of disharmony.

Only two out of three will achieve what is called true "intimacy" in the relationship. That special bond that occurs between two separate individuals, a oneness that no one can come between.

During my parents' generation, couples married because that was how two people in love could live together. Marriage was forever, and divorce was an option only in the most drastic circumstances. Today, you can get anything marriage offers quicker, cheaper, and without commitments.

We have become a generation of gratification seekers. We've misinterpreted the experts' advice about finding happiness, and we think that means doing whatever we want as long as it makes us feel good.

Sex is no longer a special experience shared by two people who love each other. Sex has become as standard on the first date as a goodnight kiss. It's all about pleasure with no strings attached.

Living with this kind of attitude has a price. Unfortunately, our children are the ones that pay the price. Children of divorced parents watch strangers come and go as their parents figure things out.

Some children grow up watching their parents argue, or worse, they live in homes filled with piercing silence. I was very young when I married my husband. I remember one of my friends said, "You're giving up the best years of your life." Forty-seven years later, I am married, and she is divorced.

I have lived all my adventures accompanied by the love of my life. And we have had so much fun. We have shown our children how you are supposed to love.

Making a relationship work takes a lot of giving without keeping a score as to who has given more. Marriage is all about tomorrows and waking up next to the same face, and it looking better as the years pass.

It's about possibilities and opportunities you can share when you learn to accept each other and work together as one team. As the years go by, you begin to feel gratitude for everything you have and the person who makes you happy.

It all boils down to one thing: to succeed in marriage, you have to give a lot of love. And usually, when you do, it always comes back to you. I learned this from my parents, whose marriage served as a role model for mine.

In his book From Beginning To End, Robert Fulghum describes a wedding ceremony he attended. The minister ended the ceremony by blessing the couple's union with these words:

May the sun of many days and years shine upon you.

May the love you have for one another grow and hold you close.

May the good true light within you guide your way on together.

May your dreams come true, and when they don't, may new dreams arise.

And long, long years from now, may you look at one another and be able to say, "Because of you, I have lived the life I always wanted to live--because of you, I have become the person I longed to be."

The woman within me clearly knows that my happiness for all these years and my future dreams includes a magic that encompasses more than myself. And there's only one person who can give that to me.

This Valentine's Day, show your children how beautiful it is to have that special love in your life.
